Since 1875, the Currituck Beach Lighthouse, towering above historic Corolla Village, has kept mariners from danger. Having the largest of seven Fresnel lens sizes, the light can be seen from 18 nautical miles away. The last brick and mortar lighthouse built in North Carolina, its unpainted red brick distinguishes it from other coastal lighthouses.

Welcome

The past several years have brought record numbers of visitors and new residents to our community. This inevitably brings change, which unsettles some, yet invigorates others. However, since the founding of Currituck County in 1668, our community has always changed and evolved, moving toward the future. What we strive to find in these times of growth is a balance between preserving our heritage and looking toward the future.

I personally am glad many are discovering our county and surrounding community, either to visit or as a place to live. What I think draws them to the area is our ingrained sense of community, unrivaled natural beauty, and friendly citizens.

I hope in reading Currituck & Northern Outer Banks magazine you will find something new about this great place, whether you are a long time resident, someone who has recently moved here, or someone visiting us for a few days. Come and enjoy all that is great about our area!

The Real Heroes OF HISTORY

written by Jeff Hampton | photography by Laura Walter

A real estate office standing in the shadow of the Currituck Beach Lighthouse has a sign over the front door that says U.S. Life Saving Station.

The banner might be overlooked by visitors who walk in, anxious to get a rental home and start their Currituck Outer Banks vacation, but this 144-year-old building was part of North Carolina's shipwreck rescue history and has ties to the Wright brothers' first flight in 1903.

Surfmen once rushed from its doors in oilskin rain gear and cork life vests to take on crashing waves hoping to save victims from a foundering ship.

The restored structure, originally built in Kill Devil Hills, serves as an office for Twiddy and Company Realty. It is one of at least three lifesaving stations on or near the Currituck Outer Banks that visitors can walk in and see up close. Another station is within view of a popular restaurant set on the Intracoastal Waterway in Coinjock.

"They are real links to the history of our Outer Banks community," said Clark Twiddy, president of the family business and son of founders Doug and Sharon Twiddy. "Hopefully these buildings are an ever-present reminder that things weren't always the way they are now."

Many of today's Outer Banks towns had their beginnings around lifesaving stations, he said.

The barrier islands of North Carolina are known as the Graveyard of the Atlantic, where hundreds of ships wrecked and sailors and passengers died in the storm-churned surf.

During the 44-year history of U.S. Life Saving Service before merging with the Coast Guard, crews nationwide saved more than 177,000 lives out of the 178,000 at peril, according to James Charlet, an Outer Banks historian who has researched and written about the U.S. Life Saving Service. They typically took on violent seas with no more than small, open, wooden boats and cork life belts.

The U.S. Lifesaving Service was set up in North Carolina in 1874 with construction of seven stations at Jones Hill in Corolla, Caffey's Inlet in Duck, Kitty Hawk, Nags Head, Bodie Island, Chicamacomico in Rodanthe and Little Kinnakeet in Avon, according to NCpedia, an online reference site for North Carolina history.

The U.S. Lifesaving Service expanded following the 1877 wreck of the U.S.S. Huron in Nags Head and the loss of the Metropolis two months later in Corolla. Nearly 200 people died in the two wrecks.

Congress was compelled to expand the service with more crews and stations along with better equipment and training. Eventually, crews at 29 stations watched over the North Carolina coastline, including the one at Kill Devil Hills, now serving as a Twiddy Realty office.

The service merged with the Coast Guard in 1915.

Doug and Sharon Twiddy constantly seek to preserve Outer Banks history, said Clark Twiddy.

Nearly 40 years ago, Doug wanted to save the deteriorating Kill Devil Hills station and asked the owner every Labor Day for years if he could buy it, according to a history on the Twiddy Realty website.

Finally, in 1986, the owner relented. The couple purchased the station and moved it in parts to its present location in Corolla.

The Twiddys found and saved many artifacts remaining in the station, which was decommissioned in 1933. They found a telegraph machine and a seashell still holding a bit of the station's original red primer paint left behind decades ago.

Original cedar shakes still protect the exterior. The interior was renovated with pine board walls and ceilings to look as it did when it housed surfmen.

"There are not a lot of wooden buildings that old remaining on the Outer Banks," Clark Twiddy said. "The most important artifact we have is the building itself."

Three Lyle guns are on display. A Lyle gun, named for its inventor, was planted in the sand during a rescue with the capability of shooting a rope several hundred yards offshore to a foundering ship. The rope was connected to a pulley and a breeches buoy. Survivors on the ship stepped into the red and white buoy ring and put their legs through an attached pair of canvas shorts, or breeches. The surfmen onshore pulled the victim over the breaking waves to safety. An original breeches buoy hangs in the corner near the front door.

Mounted on the inside wall is the faded U.S. Life Saving Service sign once affixed over the front door decades ago. A replica sign now hangs over the Twiddy Company Realtors banner at the entrance. An assortment of other artifacts and old drawings of rescues are on display.

The station was originally located on the oceanfront about a half mile from where Wilbur and Orville Wright tested their flying machine on the wind-swept sand hills of Kill Devil Hills.

The crew was curious about what the Ohio brothers were doing and wanted to help. They brought food and supplies, helped haul lumber to the camp, and delivered mail. They watched the Wrights practice flights using gliders on big Kill Devil Hill in 1900, 1901, and 1902.

On December 17, 1903, the Kill Devil Hills crew witnessed the first flight. Just at the 10:35 a.m. takeoff, with Orville on the aircraft and Wilbur standing in the sand nearby, surfman John Daniels snapped the shutter on a preset camera. It has become one of the most iconic photographs ever taken.

The Wright brothers also took a photograph of four surfmen standing in the doorway of their life saving station.

Twelve years later, the crew rescued some of the crew of the schooner Josephine in the midst of a violent storm.

Wash Woods Station

The Twiddys operate another office in the four-wheel drive area north of Corolla originally built in 1917 during World War I. Its mission was in part to house Coast Guardsmen looking for German submarines offshore. It was named Wash Woods for an old beach community named for the remnants of a maritime forest frequently flooded by ocean overwash.

The watchmen scoured the horizon from a lookout tower set close the beach – and rightfully so.

In 1918, Germany sent five large U-boats to the East Coast to lay mines and sink ships. U-140 sank four vessels off the state's coast in August 1918, according to NCPedia.

A few days later, U-117 fired a torpedo at and struck the Mirlo, a British tanker hauling fuel near Rodanthe, according the website of the Chicamacomico Historic Site. The rescue of the Mirlo crew by the Chicamacomico Station surfmen is one of the most famous and daring of them all.

The Wash Woods Station is in the four-wheel drive area of the Currituck Outer Banks, about seven miles north of Corolla.

The Twiddys bought the property in 1988 and restored the original station by the next year, according to the Twiddy website.

Crews leveled the dune and set the building on pilings, lifting it 12-feet higher off the sand. They removed paneling to reveal old plaster walls and tore up carpeting to uncover heart pine floors. Original doors, windows and hardware remain. An explosives closet found during renovations stands inside.

The boathouse was rebuilt in 2007, as it was in the days when surfmen swung open the double barn doors and pulled the surfboat on a cart to the sea. The next year the cisterns were recreated.

Three years later, master carpenter, Chris Thompson, used plans found in Washington, D.C. archives to rebuild the lookout tower. The original was destroyed by a hurricane in 1933, according to the Twiddy history. It was erected with a wood frame support structure topped by a small octagon-shaped enclosed room on top. Each side had a window.

The Wash Woods Station was decommissioned after the war and for a time used as a hunting lodge and later as a vacation rental.

Lifesaving Station, a restaurant at Sanderling Resort

A restaurant with menu items like shrimp carbonara and surfer's omelet was once Caffey's Inlet Lifesaving Station and the scene of a dramatic ocean rescue. The restaurant sits on the Sanderling Inn Resort site in Dare County, just south of the Currituck County line.

Surfboats about 25 feet long used to be stored in what is now the main dining area. Among the dozens of artifacts is a massive bell that once clanged to alarm surfmen that a ship was in trouble. Surfmen always had to remain within earshot of the bell even on days off, James Charlet said. A set of authentic surf boat oars hang along a wall near the front door.

The original station building burned down, and a new structure was built in the late 1890s. The Coast Guard decommissioned the station in the 1950s. That structure is now the restaurant.

Malachi Corbell, a stocky man with a thick mustache, was the keeper of the Caffey's Inlet station in 1877 when four fishermen were spotted foundering in a boat offshore.

Details are scarce, but Corbell managed to rescue two of the men even though his own boat capsized in the rough surf. The two other fishermen died. For his efforts, Corbell was the first in the U.S. Life Saving Service to receive the Congressional life-saving medal.

Long Point Station

A large, aging two-story house sits along the Intracoastal Waterway that was once a keeper's house for the lifesaving station located on nearby Long Point.

Long Point is noted for the manufacture of Pintsch gas, a bright-burning, long-lasting fuel used to light beacons along the coast, according to Currituck County historian Barbara Snowden.

A lifesaving station and keeper houses were built there in 1890s, Snowden said. One of the first rescues of an airplane downed in water was carried out there.

The station closed in 1917. One keeper's house was moved to the Currituck Beach Lighthouse grounds in Corolla, now serving as the gift shop. The other was moved to the banks of Intracoastal Waterway in Coinjock where it can be seen by diners at the Coinjock Marina.

These old stations reflect Outer Banks history long before the developed beaches and congested roads were here.

The surfmen risked their lives to save others and yet are often a forgotten but important part of history, Charlet said.

"This is a time that America desperately needs real heroes, not in the guise of movie stars, sports figures or singers," he said.

HIDDEN

HISTORY on the Currituck Sound

written by Josh Bass

Our History hasn't been lost; it's just hidden from most people," says Aaron Mathews, owner of Fourth Generation Outfitters.

Through his business, Aaron strives to preserve a way of life that has faded for many. Currituck County has always been an area for waterfowl, attracting all kinds of ducks, geese, and swans. The very name Currituck derives from a Native American word meaning land of the wild goose. The Currituck Sound is uniquely situated along the Atlantic migratory flyway for waterfowl as various species head south and winter. These birds have been a major food source of inhabitants of the county through most of its history.

The hundred-mile stretch today known as the Outer Banks is not much more than one long sandbar. Throughout the history of the Outer Banks, powerful storms have opened and closed inlets, changing the topography of the coastline of North Carolina. The Currituck Sound waters reached their zenith as a waterfowl habitat in the decades after an inlet, in the area now known as Corolla, closed in 1828. A strong storm that year shoaled up the inlet and changed the ecology of the sound, turning the water from salt to brackish, a mix of salt and fresh.

In this new environment, sub-aquatic vegetation and grasses grew, providing food sources for waterfowl populations migrating south. With the abundance of ducks and geese, the hunters soon followed. Visitors and hunters alike in the late 19th and early 20th centuries recorded that there would be so many ducks they would black out the sun. This drew wealthy northern sportsmen who bought up vast tracts of land to build hunt lodges. These hunters ranged from U.S. Presidents to captains of industry with names like Rockefeller, Vanderbilt, and Morgan. Many Currituck natives found work in the hunt clubs such as guiding for hunts, managing the properties as caretakers, and cleaning and cooking at the lodges.

An heir to this historic legacy is Aaron Mathews. He operates Fourth Generation Outfitters, a waterfowl guiding business. The name comes from the fact that he is the fourth generation of his family to make his living by hunting the area's plentiful waterfowl. Aaron is one of the few remaining locals making his living from waterfowl. For him, this way of life is a birthright where he is as comfortable in a boat as most people are sitting on a chair and as comfortable with a firearm as most people are with a computer. His daily work schedule does not revolve around meetings, offices, and emails but rather winds and water.

The Mathews family legacy starts far before the days when this region was a tourist mecca. The Mathews family has always lived on the Currituck Sound in the area known as Aydlott. Most locals made a hardscrabble life from farming and fishing. In the winter when they could not farm, many county men would go duck hunting and in the early days some of those were known as market hunters. They would kill ducks by the hundreds each day and ship them to northern cities as a delicacy. Aaron's great-grandfather, Richard Mathews, was one of these market hunters before this way of life was outlawed by a series of regulations. His son Carson Mathews and grandson Jack Mathews, Aaron's grandfather and father respectively, worked in the winters as hunting guides.

Fourth Generation Outfitters builds this history into their marketing. "The history of hunting in the Currituck Sound is the thing that makes us different from everyone else," says Aaron. His customers travel here to be a part of that history and to build memories with their own families. Fourth Generation Outfitters has been in business for 18 years. "One of my hunters is bringing the third generation of their family now. They started hunting with Fourth Generation 17 years ago. It was a father and his sons who were about 16 and 12 at the time. Now they are 36 and 32 and coming with their own kids," says Mathews.

Fourth Generation has had clients from around 25 states as well as visitors from outside the country. They not only hunt the Currituck Sound but also Back Bay and Chesapeake Bay in Virginia. Fourth Generation has enough guides that they can run up to three different hunts at a time. Several times a year they offer women only hunts, and they generously give back by donating hunts to military and first responders, through the organization Battle Scars. They also donate hunts to Ducks Unlimited and Delta Waterfowl.

Aaron Mathews also gives back to his local community by serving as the Currituck chair of Ducks Unlimited, a national nonprofit dedicated to conservation of waterfowl. "Knowing everybody, especially our fellow hunters and guides, really gives a sense of community that makes this area special," says Mathews.

Hunting out of a brush blind is one type of duck hunting in Currituck. This is an area in the water with pilings sunk under the water and a structure built on top, which is then hidden with pine and sage as a way to camouflage from the ducks. Decoys are spread in the water in front of the blind, numbering from about a dozen up to 100 decoys. The hunters sit in the blind with a guide, who, when he sees a bird come near, will use a manufactured duck call or his own voice to mimic the sound of a duck. Aaron himself is a six-time world champion swan caller.

Historically, the Currituck area was home to prolific decoy carvers who fashioned waterfowl likenesses from wooden blocks and wire and canvas structures. These decoys now are highly collectible as folk art, often selling at shows and auctions for prices around $100 up to well over $100,000.

Mathews strives to promote this history as well. He specifically collects and preserves the work of decoy carver Wallace O'Neal. O'Neal lived in Currituck County and was a prolific decoy carver in the early part of the 20th century. His work is highly prized by collectors today and regularly shows up at auction.

History and nature provide a unique mixture on the waters of the Currituck Sound. Visitors come to this area from all over the world to write their own names into the history books of duck hunting in Currituck. Fourth Generation Outfitters helps people who are ready to embark on a new adventure. Come experience the rich hunting history in the Currituck Sound for yourself.

Historic LANDMARKS

Stroll the halls of an historic .Art Nouveau mansion.

Soar over the Currituck Sound on a hang glider built for two.

Savor a glass of wine just steps away from where it was produced.

Currituck has its own stately Historic Courthouse and Jail. It's on the National Register of Historic Places, and for good reason: both sites were originally constructed in the 1700's and rebuilt in the 1800's. The Historic Jarvisburg Colored School makes that list, too. After an extensive restoration, the school operates as a museum with thoughtful exhibits that reveal an underrepresented and important part of North Carolina history.

Across the county line, history enthusiasts won't want to miss the museums and historical sites that tell stories from our region's past. On the mainland, the Camden County Heritage Museum offers tours of their early 20th century jailhouse and exhibits of local history. From the cry of soldiers at the Battle of South Mills to the secrets of freedom seekers in the Great Dismal Swamp, the museum illustrates these varied stories. Explore the county's heritage through artifacts and miniature replicas or take the Historic Jail tour. Knowledgeable docents bring these stories to life.

If you like your history with a healthy dose of the great outdoors, head for Corolla on the Currituck Outer Banks. Within just a few miles of one another, Historic Corolla Village boasts the Whalehead Club, the Currituck Beach Lighthouse, and the Wild Horse Museum, in addition to historic homes and a 19th century schoolhouse. Visitors can explore much of the Village on foot. Climb the lighthouse for expansive views of the Currituck Sound, and then stroll the charming grounds of the Whalehead Club. Or, see how people in Corolla have interacted with their maritime environment at the nearby Outer Banks Center for Wildlife Education.

The Currituck area is also a prime spot for coastal sightseeing. In addition to its beautiful historic sites, Corolla is known for picture perfect beaches and idyllic soundfront spaces. Lucky observers might see some of the town's famous wild horses taking in the scenery, too.

These Spanish Mustangs have roamed the Northern Outer Banks for more than 500 years! If you'd rather not leave a sighting to chance, book one of the area's popular horse tours with a local company. Just remember to give our wild neighbors their space – at least 50 feet – and resist the temptation to feed them. Even more wildlife abound on remote Carova and Kotts Island. Take the ferry over from mainland Currituck for bird watching at the adjacent Mackey Island National Wildlife Refuge: geese, ducks, ospreys, falcons, and even bald eagles are frequently spotted along its Great Marsh Trail.

Whether you're a seasoned local or a first-time visitor, you'll find stunning scenery and distinctive diversions all around the Currituck area.

In Camden, the Dismal Swamp State Park welcomes visitors to its unique ecosystem. George Washington would be amazed at the progress made since his first venture in taming the swamp. Today, paths made by loggers are being used to provide a glimpse of the Dismal's valuable secrets. The park offers interactive exhibits, a half-mile boardwalk, 20 miles of trails, and numerous Ranger-led programs. Learn how freedom seekers sought refuge in the swamp. Canoe and kayak rentals offer the chance to paddle the historic Dismal Swamp Canal. Birding, biking, hiking, paddling, and photography are all great activities at the swamp!

Currituck's Rural Center is also great for kayaking or canoeing on the Currituck Sound. The 105-acre site is dog-friendly and features two stocked ponds for fishing. For adventures on wheels, check out the county's skate park. It offers 7,000 square feet of concrete engineered for skateboarding and is just around the corner from the Currituck Community Center, home to the YMCA, Senior Center, and Cooperative Extension office.

Faster. Higher. Crazier. Explore on a whole new level with H2OBX Waterpark or Kitty Hawk Kites. The rides and attractions at H2OBX Waterpark are built for thrill seekers of all ages. Keep things relaxed with a spin down the park's lazy river, or brave the OBX-themed slides for killer views and serious splashdowns. With deals for locals and visitors alike, H2OBX has quickly become an Outer Banks favorite. Just up the highway, Kitty Hawk Kites offers hang gliding and other extreme experiences from locations up and down the Carolina coast. Their hang gliding school is the largest in the world! The Future of Healthcare for Northeastern North Carolina Sentara Healthcare's new, 135-acre Sentara Albemarle Regional Health Campus at Halstead Boulevard Extended and Thunder Road in Elizabeth City will begin opening in 2023.

Featuring a modern, efficient and patient-centric layout, the $200 million campus marks the most significant healthcare investment in northeastern North Carolina since the current Sentara Albemarle Medical Center was built over 60 years ago.

The Sentara Albemarle Regional Health Campus construction project is divided into two phases — a medical office building that will open in 2023 and a new hospital slated to open in late 2024 or early 2025.

Phase 1: Medical Office Building

The first phase is the two-story, 83,000-square-foot medical office building.

Featuring the new Sentara Cancer Care Center, the facility will include a state-of-the-art radiation oncology suite and house a new linear accelerator to provide radiation with pinpoint accuracy for radiation treatments.

It will also introduce a new digital hub to the community, which will be a significant asset in connecting our community to certain specialties that would traditionally require driving out of the area. It can also bridge a gap for pre- and post-surgical care. For example, a highly specialized surgery may still need to be performed at Sentara Norfolk General Hospital. But many of the appointments leading up to and after the surgery could be done within the digital hub, staffed by a clinician like a nurse or medical assistant, so patients are still seen in person but avoid the need to travel as often to see their specialist.

Other tenants of the building will include cardiac rehabilitation, cardiology, central testing, obstetrics and gynecology, mammography, oncology, orthopedics and sports medicine, pediatrics, vascular and general surgery and wound care.

Phase 2: A New Sentara Albemarle Medical Center

The second phase is the new Sentara Albemarle Medical Center, a modern, 88-bed hospital. It will feature a high-efficiency, patient-centric layout representing the trend toward preventive care, outpatient services and minimal hospital stays. Surgeries that used to require days in the hospital are now outpatient procedures. Primary care visits are being done virtually. Patients can now stay home or check in with their doctor during their lunch break at work. This new trend in care does not necessarily change what patients need but changes how they expect to meet those needs.

"Innovation at the new Sentara Albemarle Regional Health Campus means many great things for northeastern North Carolina," said Phil Jackson, President of Sentara Albemarle Medical Center. "It means having a hospital built not only for today's landscape, but also for the health care of tomorrow and into the future. It means detailed design considerations to ensure we're offering the best experience for our friends and neighbors from the moment they walk through the door. It means leveraging digital capabilities our region has never before experienced. It also means bringing our services together in one location so our patients can visit their doctor, get lab tests, see their specialist, and so much more... all under one roof."

Visitors coming to play golf on Outer Banks courses encounter some of the same beauty and hazards as did early pioneers.

In the 1800s, wealthy industrialists sought out the sounds, marshes and woodlands for its prolific game hunting opportunities. The Wright brothers came to the Outer Banks more than a century ago for the winds and soft sands.

Currituck golf courses offer challenges ranging from wind-blown hills formed from ancient sand dunes to forests and marshlands teeming with wildlife.

Six golf courses lie along U.S. 158 and N.C. 168 and another sets on the Currituck Outer Banks in Corolla just off N.C. 12. The list includes The Currituck Club in Corolla, Kilmarlic Golf Club and The Pointe Golf Club, both in Powells Point, The Carolina Club in Grandy, and Eagle Creek Golf Club in Moyock.

"I've played golf all over the world," said Bryan Sullivan, director of golf at Kilmarlic Golf Club in Powells Point. "The Outer Banks has amazing variety compared to other places."

USA Today's Golfweek ranks North Carolina fifth in the nation for the number of Top 100 public courses within the state. Carl's Golfland ranks North Carolina fifth among all states for a golf vacation, in part because of the Outer Banks courses.

Close by the courses are wide open beaches, good fresh and salt-water fishing, iconic things to see such as lighthouses and wild horses, and great places to eat with local character and fresh seafood dishes.

"It's an underrated golf destination in that it has terrific courses and excellent restaurants, plus the historical aspects of the Outer Banks," said Kevin Brafford, executive director of the North Carolina Golf Panel.

From the mid-1990s to the early 2000s, all six courses sprung up, typically in conjunction with housing developments. Currituck County was one of the fastest growing places in the state by percentage, increasing in population by nearly 4,500 in the 1990s to 18,190 by the end of the decade.

Interest in golf here surged with the influx of new residents and the immense fame of the beaches. Plus, the effects of a young Tiger Woods raised the popularity of golf everywhere.

Years later, interest in golf waned, and it seemed as if there were too many golf courses in one place, said J.T. Symons, PGA general manager for The Currituck Club. Numbers of golfers and rounds played declined.

But the Covid-19 pandemic changed that, he said. He calculates that 20 percent more people are playing than they were three years ago. "It's directly related to the pandemic," he said. During the outbreak, the Outer Banks drew record numbers of people seeking the isolation of the beaches. Golf was a sport where a few friends could get together and enjoy themselves away from crowds.

The Currituck Club

The Currituck Club is set in Corolla between the Atlantic Ocean and the Currituck Sound. Acclaimed designer Rees Jones built the course of nearly 7,000 yards in 1996 making use of the Outer Banks landscapes. It is a links course built on the sandy dunes of Corolla and resembles written by Jeff Hampton photography by Laura Walter

the historic courses built on the coast of Scotland and Ireland.

One of the oldest hunt clubs in the nation operated on the property here until the old lodge burned down in 2003. The club still functions but in a different location. Golfers can see the duck hunting blinds jutting from the surface of the Currituck Sound like tiny vegetated islands.

The weather and winds that stir up the ducks have their effects on golfers, too.

"Play it on three consecutive days, and you'll likely enjoy three different experiences," said golf course writer Bill Kamenjar in a blog post for Playobxgolf.com.

Some of the fairways and greens lie along marshes on the Currituck Sound shoreline and near maritime forests full of live oak trees. They include rolling sand dunes that can reach as high as 80 feet, a much greater change in elevation than expected on the Outer Banks, Brafford said.

The Currituck Club has become a must play course for a golf vacation to the Outer Banks, he said.

The signature hole for the course is the Par 5 No. 7, Symons said. It offers views all the way across the sound and challenging shots. "You've got to hit good shots all the way to the green," he said. "There's trouble left and trouble right."

The links are available to members and the public and include a practice bunker, putting green and a driving range. It also offers a family-friendly restaurant, Bunkers Grille and Bar.

Kilmarlic Club

This golf destination of nearly 6,700 yards designed by award-winning course architect

Tom Steele opened in 2002.

Located about four miles from the Wright Memorial Bridge, the layout passes through the natural Currituck countryside with heavily wooded sections, marshes and ponds. At any time, deer, raccoon, waterfowl, otters, bald eagles and even a bobcat or bear may make an appearance.

"There is so much natural beauty here," Sullivan said. Recently, managers removed 25 acres of manicured grass and let it grow back to natural vegetation increasing the beauty, adding to the challenge and contributing to conservation of the original habitat.

While the course is part of a community, a golfer will see houses on only six holes. The fairways and greens are noted for always being in good condition, he added.

One of its most challenging holes is the par 5 number 16 that features bunkers, marsh and a water hazard. There is risk and reward on this hole, he said.

Breakfast and lunch are served at the Black Tartan Tap Room, a restaurant located on the property.

The Carolina Club

This public golf course winds through the west side of the Grandy community, offering more than 7,000 yards of fairways. Russell Breeden and Keith Hall designed the course in 1998.

It lies about 20 minutes from Kitty Hawk along U.S. 158. The most memorable hole could be the par 3 seventh, featuring an island green that can be challenging.

"The course was in amazing condition even in mid-August drought conditions," according to one review on the Carolina Club website. "The greens roll true."

The Pointe Golf Club

The Pointe opened in 1995, is a sister course to The Carolina Club and is also designed by Russell Breeden.

"The Pointe Golf Club has been recognized by visitors and locals alike as one of the most fun and playable golf courses on the Outer Banks," according to the course website. The layout works well for golfers of all skill levels. It was voted best of the beach several times in recent years, the website said.

The Pointe is 6,343 yards, with a fairly open design and a reputation for great putting greens. It is located about 3.5 miles from the Wright Memorial Bridge.

Eagle Creek Golf Club

This 6,700-yard course opened in 1999 and was designed Jay Overton through one of the largest subdivisions in Currituck County. The fairways follow through the neighborhood but with ample woodlands and verdant vegetation, including local wildflowers along the way.

The Moyock course is located some 40 miles from the beaches but is close to the Chesapeake border and convenient to Hampton Roads and the Norfolk International Airport.

It features a practice green and chipping green.

The Eagle Creek Bar and Grill is open for lunch and dinner.

Building Blocks To Succeed

written by Mary B. Simmons

Currituck is known and loved for many resources it offers residents and tourists...hunting and fishing, pristine beaches, wild horses, stunning views of the Currituck and Albemarle Sounds, a rural atmosphere even among unprecedented growth and opportunity. Yet, Currituck offers another resource that is critical to the future growth of the county: an innovative school system with an outstanding staff meeting the needs of over 4000 students daily, from PK (pre-kindergarten) through Grade 12.

Our school system is an invaluable resource for students, employing the most qualified staff members to guide our county students into becoming life-long learners and preparing them for success in their future. The ten schools in the county offer students dedicated and caring staff members while each school has its own unique personality. Step into our schools: from Knotts Island Elementary School or J. P. Knapp Early College, housed in historic buildings funded heartily years ago by New York publishing giant and Ducks Unlimited founder, Joseph Palmer Knapp, to Central Elementary School, Griggs Elementary School, and Moyock Elementary School, schools that blend historic buildings with new additions, and then step into Currituck County High School, Currituck Middle School, Moyock Middle School, and Jarvisburg and Shawboro Elementary Schools, each more modern buildings but sharing the same community oriented focus – your students matter here. They are part of our community.

Currituck County Schools provide students a strong educational foundation beginning with our very youngest children...our preschool and elementary school children. Preschool and our early grades provide our students the educational foundation to succeed at the middle and high school levels, not only by teaching the basics such as reading, writing, mathematics, and study habits, but also by focusing on the physical and mental needs of each child, fulfilled by play and hands on activities with small group experiences. Preschool and elementary school staff are highly qualified, and highly trained – many of them have worked for and earned their National Board Certifications. They are themselves life-long learners and participate in staff development activities to hone their skills.

Currituck teachers braved a new frontier when COVID forced them to go fully digital. They met the challenge of offering virtual learning experiences for their students while maintaining connection with each young student through computer and phone interaction. Currituck County teachers now use digital learning and face-to-face instruction in blended learning situations to provide unique opportunities for each student.

Outstanding Program Focus: The First Building Block

For our very youngest students, Currituck County Schools offer a NC Pre-K Program (previously More at Four), which takes a play-based approach to learning. These teachers and assistants build on a child's natural curiosity to provide student-centered instruction. Walk into one of these classrooms and see children engaged in play and fun learning activities. The dedicated NC Pre-K staff meet students at their individual levels and nurture whole-child development. NC Pre-K classrooms are housed at Central and Griggs Elementary Schools.

Elementary School Excitement

Catch some of the wonder and excitement for school and learning by walking through the doors of one of our elementary schools. Feel the excitement, whether you take the ferry to visit Knotts Island Elementary School, or drive to our southernmost school, Jarvisburg Elementary School, or visit any of our other fine elementary schools, Moyock, Central, and Shawboro, and you will feel the joy when you walk through the doors.

At Knotts Island Elementary School experience small school life with Christmas plays, school-wide reading challenges, author visits, and family coding nights. Visit Moyock Elementary School, and you could experience Glow Runs, Mad Science Assemblies, Balloons Over Broadway parades, and service projects. Travel south to Shawboro Elementary School, and find Fun Runs, Santa and his elves on the roof, Food Drives for the community, and Veteran's Day programs. A little farther south at Central Elementary School, witness book character parades, reading festivals, and 5K Run & Walks. Stop by Griggs Elementary School to cheer students on as they participate in a 5K Color Run, pumpkin decorating contests, and Superheroes Spirit days. Farther south at Jarvisburg Elementary School see the excitement as students participate in scavenger hunts, STEM activities, Mission Impossible, and Candy Cane Coding.

Beyond the Foundation: Middle and High Schools Offer Diverse Programming

From athletics to clubs, from Career and Technical offerings to scholarly academics and unique and new course offerings, Currituck County middle schools and high schools provide learning, enrichment, and fun that build on the firm foundation of the earlier grades. Students at Currituck Middle School and Moyock Middle School get their first taste of school sports teams, chorus and band, Beta Clubs, FFA, and interest-based clubs. They get a menu of coursework in Career and Technical Courses or CTE Career Cafe Moments, and some students even begin high school coursework in middle school.

Students at J.P. Knapp Early College not only pursue dual enrollment with the College of The Albemarle (COA), but participate in many club activities, such as Chess Club, Math Club, and Fine Arts Club while also raising donations for our local animal shelter. What's cooking at Currituck County High School? Club offerings and school sports are strong and exciting! The CCHS Beta Club had a donation drive for the animal shelter. Students experienced a thrilling

Law Enforcement Symposium, the annual Chorus Winter Concert, when the band and chorus again thrilled the audience, and the outstanding theater program. CCHS courses include exciting offerings such as COA Dual Enrollment, expanded CTE offerings, Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps (AFROTC), English 4 with a foods focus, and EMT and Fire CTE courses, along with a buffet of other course offerings to provide Currituck County students with exceptional choices.
